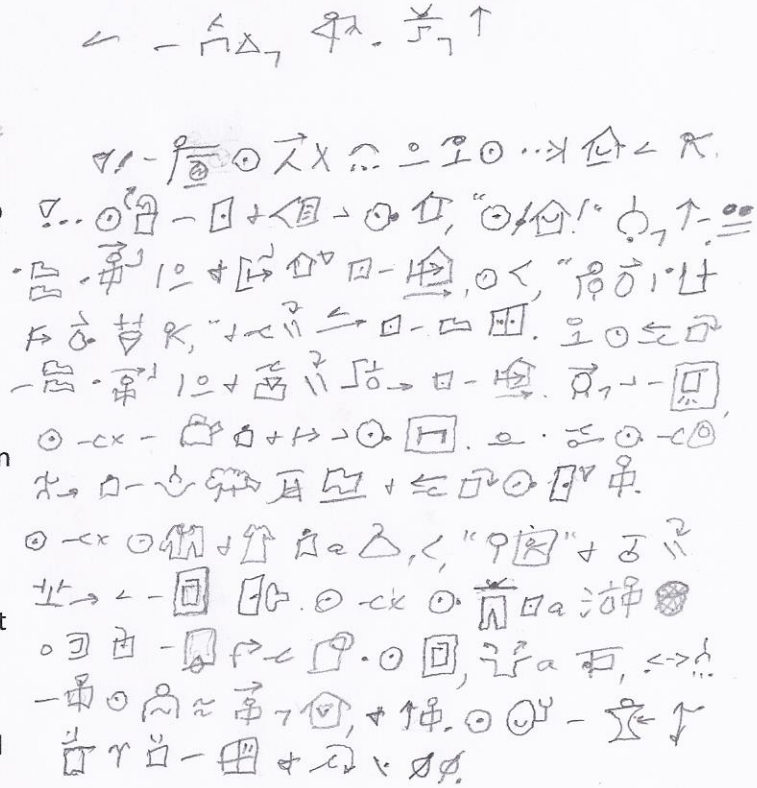
From "The life-changing magic of tidying up" by Marie Kondo, p 130

get home

This is the routine I follow every day when I ~~returned~~ from work. First, I unlocked the door and announced to my house, "I'm home!" Picking up the pair of shoes I wore yesterday and left out in the entranceway, I say, "thank you very much for your hard work," and put them away in the shoe cupboard. Then I take off the shoes I wore yesterday and placed them neatly in the entranceway. Heading to the kitchen, I put the kettle on and go to my bedroom. There I lay my handbag gently on the soft sheepskin rug and take off my outdoor clothes. I put my jacket and dress on a hanger, say, "good job!" And hang them temporarily from the closet door knob. I put my tights in a laundry basket that fits into the bottom right corner of my closet, open a drawer, select the clothes I feel like wearing inside, and get dressed. I greet the waist-high potted plant by the window and stroke its leaves.



No notes. If anyone would like explanations, just say so.