[illegible] pristine [latin prins - first] [illegible] clean

([illegible] principle [illegible] rule [illegible] samuraisword / strict)

[illegible] nucleus [. nux nut] [illegible] acorn [illegible] essence ([illegible] is, [illegible] be) [illegible] core)

[illegible]

[illegible]

I just wrote these 2 ids then looked them up to check. I got them right. Id seem somehow to remember themselves with a great deal of automaticity, effortlessly. Such is the nature of graphic images in the mind. They are there in the subconscious.

[illegible] George Lakoff [illegible]

[illegible]

a [illegible]. I listened to George Lakoff in a video recently speak of a "fiscal cliff" ([Latin fisc basket] [illegible] money) + remark about cliff being a metaphor for danger. Cliff is the metaphor for danger that I have used for a long time. I use it for many, many concepts involving danger — risk, caution, etc. Ids are supremely metaphoric, using an instance or example to stand for a category.

[illegible] work [illegible] power [illegible] strong [illegible] can [illegible] stairs

[illegible] ([illegible] work), [illegible]

Tho maybe too complex ([illegible] is my basic id for "work") I delight in how accurately + richly this id captures the concept.

[illegible] delight [illegible] light [illegible] grin ([illegible] smile)

[illegible] my new id for "rich" [illegible] full [illegible] container [illegible] variety

— full + varied
