Dread, Look Forward To, and Linguistic Transcendance

time · past · past indicator · future afraid · happy · tongue · words · language · adjective · Latin across (trans-) · beyond · this · here (, since it contains "beyond" is clearer than "trans seend" (across climb))

One thing that excited me about this project from the beginning was the potential it offers to transcend, go beyond, ordinary language — to allow one to break free from the prison-like limitations and artistically create personal language and language of the future.

dread — anticipate with fear
look forward to — anticipate with happiness (anticipate mind)
((a screen in the forehead area) face)

But isn't "look forward to" a clumsy, kind of dead, stupid expression?
"Look forward to"... with what?

auspicious · an , an , : [. avis bird, .spic look]
This is an etymid, an id based on etymology : [ ] from the practise of [ooking at bird entrails to predict the future.
ominous · point (finger) · danger (cliff) · bad

---

etymology < say word source think know
area of knowledge (large space area)
abbreviated to -ology
biology · physiology (physics · mathematics — applying "-ology" to subject names that don't end in it, — an act of linguistic Gleichschaltung or rationalization.
:)